

in the departments of the Western Bank.

The Secretary of the Treasury makes several recommendations of his own, in his report, relating to the fiscal question before the Senate, of which he has made a copy of his paper to the press. He says, "We have another instance of a very bad example set by the first draft of the bill, and that is, that it is very evasive, and that it is the result of want of knowledge, and very ignorant, of the intricacies of the documents as much occupied in covering up the fact that he has no knowledge himself, and can't even give a reason for it."

Mr. Cass's speech was a good one. He said, "I am sorry to see a coalition of the two great parties of this country, the Whigs and the Democrats, in the hands of the friends of the South, who have got the control of the Senate, and the Senate has given a vote of censure upon the Secretary of State."

At the time of the Secretary's censure, the House had passed a bill, which was introduced by Mr. Fillmore, to allow the President to call out the militia for internal purposes.

It was voted, without a single voice against it, to be sent to the Senate.

It was voted, to be sent to the Senate,

to be sent to the Senate,